According to Internal Revenue Service regulations, an employee/retiree who receives tuition remission benefits for a non-dependent child is receiving taxable benefits which must be reported to the IRS. The IRS considers the following children as dependents:

- A dependent child under the age of 19 who is registered as a part-time or full-time student.
- A dependent child between the ages of 19-23 who is registered as a full-time student.
  - Dependent status is determined by age at the end of the calendar year.
- A child of any age who is claimed as a dependent due to a permanent and total disability.

If you have any questions regarding whether a child falls within the IRS definition of a dependent, please consult with your personal tax advisor.

I verify that the above-referenced child  IS  IS NOT (check box that applies) a dependent based upon the IRS regulations referenced above. I acknowledge that if the above referenced child is not a dependent, the tuition remission benefits that I receive are taxable income.
